switty along the quanty of the speech need not be the highest.

But there was no story in "The New Morality." Miss George had called a neighbor a scandalous name because her husband was firting with her. The incident happened before the curtain arose. Miss George lay in bed all during the first act and talked about it. The two husbands of the ladies involved talked about it all during the second act. They may be talking about it still. In all this speech there was not a ray of wit. The author exhibited no observation of life and no supply of natural humor. So there was nothing to make up the three acts, only words and actors to speak them.

"Godless Men" at the Capitol start there was nothing to make up the three acts, only words and actors to speak them.

Poor actors! They were experienced, like Lawrence Grossmith and Ernest Lawford, as well as Warburton Gamble. They talked very well. Their efforts by distorting the phrases to add some point to the text were rather pathetic at times. Of course they failed in the attempt. Miss George played with her usual comic facility. But "The New Morality" is beyond all skill.

mad Her Crook Sweetheart.

Through the courtesy of Lee Shubert and Max Marcin "Three Live Ghosta," the comedy now playing at the Nora Bayes Theatre, was presented last night at Sing Sing prison. The performance was under the auspices of the entertainment committee of the Mutual Welfare League, Frederick Mark chairman. The members of the company, after a tour of inspection of the prison, were guests of the Welfare League at a dinner in the prison. The performance began at seven o'clock.

What seemed to please the audience was the tendency of the character of Spoofy, played by Cyril Chadwick, to pick up bdd objects, from babies in arms for the play and Jimmie Gubbins came in for their share of applause, while most of the sympathy went to the American Girl (played by Miss Flora Sheffield) and her crook sweetheart.
